THE SHOTGUN OFFENSE

Football, the San Francisco 49er way, has always been colorful and spectacular—a statement affirmed by the club's ever-increasing following, both at home and on the road, and despite the absence of even a divisional title after 11 seasons of labor in the National Football League.

Coach Howard W. (Red) Hickey added another sparkling chapter to 49er history in 1960 when he installed his controversial, but admittedly effective Shotgun offense.

The story began at a Georgetown University practice field on November 22 when the 49ers opened preparations for a Baltimore meeting with the defending champion Colts. The outlook for San Francisco, to put it mildly, was bleak. The club had a 4-4 record up to that stage of the season and appeared to be on the brink of disaster.

Before the workout began, Hickey gathered the squad around him, extracted several sheets of paper from his jacket and announced:

"We've worked out a new offensive pattern for this week. We're going to beat the Colts with it!"

The players exchanged incredulous looks. Several said later they thought the head coach had cracked under the strain of a losing campaign. Hickey and his assistants, fully aware they had a tremendous selling job on their hands, plunged into the task with their fingers crossed. For more than four months they had drilled the team in the intricacies and timing of the T-formation—the bread-and-butter formation of every organization in professional football.

Now, with only five games remaining, the familiar maneuvers were to be supplanted by untried theories. Nevertheless, 38 Doubting Thomases lined up for indoctrination. They found that the quarterback would be five to seven yards directly behind the center, with the left end spread out 10 to 15 yards from the left tackle and the right end spread three to five yards from the right tackle. The tight backs (left half and fullback) were one yard out and one yard back of the left and right tackles, respectively. The right half was 10 yards out and one yard back of the right end.

The critics who claimed it was nothing basically new were absolutely right. Many teams, in desperation, had placed their T-quarterback in what amounted to a short-punt formation. But it was used almost strictly as a last-minute passing attack gimmick. Hickey planned not only to utilize both the passing and running talents of the quarterback but also to design rushing forays for the other backfield men.

"There is no limit to the things we can do from this formation," he declared.

The players worked hard, although it was evident for several days that few, if any, were "sold" on the new offense. The atmosphere began to change during the Friday session. An undercurrent of excitement and enthusiasm was evident. The players began to look forward to surprising the potent Colt defense that included such 49er hecklers as Gino Marchetti and "Big Daddy" Lipscomb.

Saturday's brief session was the best of the week.

"By that time," recalled a player, "we figured we really had something going for us. Newspaper stories that we were 16-point underdogs were just another torch for the fire."

The Shotgun was unveiled for the first time before a capacity crowd of more than 57,000 at Memorial Stadium, Baltimore. While the rabid Colt fans looked on in disbelief, the 49ers staged one of the season's greatest upsets, 30-22.

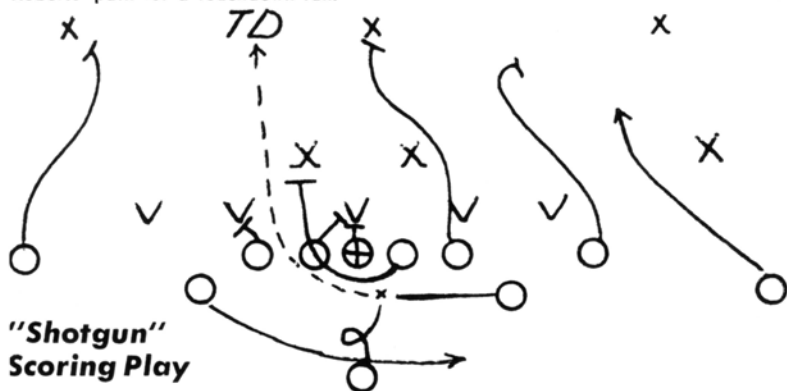

Basic

"Shotgun" Formation

HOW IT'S DONE—These diagrams show how the 49ers line up in the Shotgun formation and how a play is executed. Up forward, the left end is 10 to 15 yards from the left tackle, while the right end is three to five yards from the right tackle. The left halfback in one yard out and one yard back from the left tackle and the fullback takes his stance at the same distance from the right tackle. The right halfback is one yard back and 10 yards out from the right end. The quarterback is approximately five yards directly behind the center. In the diagrammed play, John Brodie, the quarterback, stepped forward, spun around, faked a handoff to J. D. Smith, the left half, and gave the ball directly to C. R. Roberts, the fullback. Key blocks by the interior linemen—left tackle John Thomas; left guard Mike Magac; center Frank Morze; right guard Bruce Bosley and right tackle Bob St. Clair cleared Roberts' path for a touchdown run.

"Shotgun" Scoring Play

The largest Los Angeles crowd of 1961—more than 77,000—poured into the Coliseum the following Sunday to see resurgent 49ers and their Shotgun shenanigans. San Francisco collected an unprecedented fourth straight league win over the Rams, 23-7, and the star of the afternoon was unheralded C. R. Roberts, running wild from the fullback post.

Green Bay, ultimate Western Conference champion, derailed 49er hopes in the rain and mud at San Francisco, 13-0, but the club finished the year in a second-place tie by again hammering the Colts, 34-10.

Now the question arises: will the Shotgun be an effective weapon in 1961? Hickey gives this answer.

"We are still sold on the potential of the Shotgun. True, it came as a surprise in desperate days. But we still think it hasn't been thoroughly exploited."

The ripple in orthodox football in 1960 could become the revolution of 1961.

The San Francisco 49er Story

Bearing one of the most colorful and honored nicknames in Far West history, the San Francisco 49ers entered professional football in 1946 and matured, nationally and locally, when the club was granted a National League franchise in 1950. Pro football in the "Gateway to the Orient" has lived up to all the excitement and drama of early western fact and fiction.

The original "49ers" were the hardy pioneers who made the perilous voyage around Cape Horn after gold was discovered in California in 1848. Today, a football club, inspired by that early spirit, has captured the devotion and admiration of thousands of faithful rooters. Newspapermen and radio and television commentators have honored the San Francisco team with this name—"The Fighting 49ers." This accolade has become the proud byword of the many players who have worn the Cardinal and Silver.

Less than 20 years ago, professional football in San Francisco—and the entire west, for that matter—was just a dream wistfully indulged in by Anthony J. (Tony) Morabito, a University of Santa Clara alumnus who had been moderately successful in the lumber hauling business. Tony had played the game at St. Ignatius High School in his native city but a shoulder injury in his freshman year at Santa Clara dashed his hopes for collegiate fame.

Tony was one of the few men who realized that air travel would make feasible a coast-to-coast rivalry in football, as well as baseball. He explained his views to Bill Leiser, sports editor of the San Francisco Chronicle. Leiser, in turn, put Tony in touch with Arch Ward, sports editor of the Chicago Tribune.

Ward was the organizing genius behind the All-America Conference, which held its first meeting in October of 1944 and began operations in the fall of 1946. Tony was granted a franchise for San Francisco, along with his partners in the lumber business—Allen E. Sorrell and E. J. Turre—and his younger brother, Victor.

For their inaugural year, the 49ers were fortunate in signing players who were well known to the San Francisco Bay area fans—Frankie Albert and Norm Standlee of Stanford; Alyn Beals, Eddie Forrest, Ken Casanega and Visco Grgich of Santa Clara. There was also a wealth of talent from the 4th Air Force team, which had performed many times in San Francisco during the war. Outstanding among this group were Johnny Strykowski and Joe Vetrano.

With Lawrence T. (Buck) Shaw as head coach, the 49ers slowly but surely won a following for pro football. In the four years of the AAC, the 49ers finished second to the talent-packed Cleveland Browns, but the great sport became a byword throughout the metropolitan San Francisco area.

(In 1946, for example, the 49ers sold only 1,200 season tickets and averaged 23,384 paying fans per game. Within three years, they had climbed to more than 7,000 season tickets and 38,216 average paid attendance.)

In 1950, San Francisco fans celebrated the entry of the 49ers into the NFL, along with Cleveland and Baltimore. But the road was rough and hazardous the first year—the team won only three games against nine defeats.

Bulwarked by the acquisition of Y. A. Tittle, who shared quarterback duties with Frankie Albert, the 49ers roared back in 1951 and missed tying for the Western Conference title by only a half-game. That was the beginning of the club's stirring role as a prime participant in every NFL race except 1955-56-58.

The early teams had such colorful performers as Albert and his hefty

Stanford sidekick—Norm (Chief) Standlee—as well as Alyn Beals, the all-time scoring leader in the All-America Conference; Guard Visco Grgich; Halfback John (Strike) Strzykalski, and Fullback Joe (Jet) Perry.

Their pioneering paved the way for Tittle, Hugh (The King) McElhenny, Leo Nomellini, Billy Wilson and the other outstanding stars who made the 49ers the NFL's largest drawing road club for five of the past 11 years—as well as sending home season ticket sales skyrocketing to the 40,000 mark.

San Francisco fans point with particular pride to these 49er teams:

1948—Seventeen rookies helped the 49ers to a 12-2 record. This team established all-time records of 3663 yards rushing and 495 total points.

1951—Another excellent rookie crop spurred the 49ers to a 7-4-1 record and a tie for second place in the Western Conference.

1952—Two victories over Detroit, eventual division and league champion, highlighted this season. McElhenny was "Pro Player of the Year" and was unanimously selected the most exciting player in the game.

1953—Unsung in preseason estimations, this 49er club, proudly displaying 13 rookies, had a 9-3 record for second place. Joe Perry gained more than 1,000 yards, a feat he was to repeat the next year.

1957—The spectacular "Alley Oop" pass—Tittle to R. C. Owens—was responsible for three victories in the final seconds and the team tied Detroit for the Western Conference crown, losing a dramatic playoff struggle.

1959—A rugged defense, sparked by five rookies, kept the 49ers on top of the division until the final two weeks of the season. J. D. Smith, a castoff from another club, was brilliant on offense, becoming one of the few men ever to gain more than 1,000 yards in a single campaign.

1960—Another great defense, plus the installation of Red Hickey's spectacular "Shotgun" formation, featured a thrilling stretch drive to a second place tie with Detroit. The 49er defenders allowed only 205 points, best showing in the NFL.

The smashing success of San Francisco in pro football had a tragic overtone on Oct. 27, 1957 when Tony Morabito died of a heart attack while watching the 49ers play the Chicago Bears at Kezar Stadium. Tony had been living on the proverbial "borrowed time" since 1952 when he suffered a coronary occlusion. Doctors urged him to get out of football, asserting that the high emotional factors of the sport were dangerous. He refused to retire for the 49ers weren't just a hobby for him—they were his life's blood.

No team ever gave an owner a better tribute. The 49ers were losing, 17-7, when they were informed of Tony's death. They stormed back for a 21-17 upset victory, turning away numerous Chicago touchdown onslaughts in the fourth period.

Going into the 1961 season, the 49ers approached the 40,000 mark in season tickets and were more firmly entrenched than ever in the hearts of the 3,000,000 residents of the San Francisco Bay area.

The club has been especially proud of the fact that the majority of the players have decided to make their homes in San Francisco or its suburbs. Of the 38 players on the 1960 roster, 22 had become permanent residents of the area. Numerous "alumni" have also settled in the City by the Golden Gate.

After Tony died, control of the club passed on to his widow Josephine, and to Victor Morabito. Other owners include Albert J. Ruffo, Dr. William E. O'Grady, Franklin Mieuli, Lawrence Purcell, James Ginella, Louis Spadia and Frankie Albert.

FORTY NINER COACHES

HOWARD W. (RED) HICKEY

Head Coach

One of the most important days in Red Hickey's life occurred in January of 1949 when he paid a reluctant visit to Clark Shaughnessy at the offices of the Los Angeles Rams. The rugged end from the University of Arkansas had compiled an enviable record as both an offensive and defensive player for the Rams, but he was faced with the unpleasant duty of telling Shaughnessy, then head coach, that he had decided to forego additional competition in order to accept a college coaching offer.

Shaughnessy, remembering that Red had performed brilliantly in 1948, catching 30 passes to rank with the National Football League's top receivers, listened sympathetically. His answer was the one Hickey had dreamed of, but didn't think was possible.

"There's no reason for you to leave Los Angeles," Shaughnessy said. "You have a coaching job with the Rams if you want it."

Los Angeles historians give Red much of the credit for the Rams' success in 1949-50 when they won division titles and in 1951 when they captured the NFL championship. The record books show the awesome statistics compiled by the offensive ends and backs tutored by Hickey.

The path of his career still had more turnings. Along with the other Ram assistants, he resigned at the end of 1954. The 49ers immediately signed him as an aide to the late Norman P. Strader. Red served under Frank Albert in 1956-57-58, then was appointed head coach after Albert resigned.

The 49ers have been surprising championship contenders during both of Hickey's seasons in the No. 1 job. In 1959, the club was almost unanimously picked for last place in the Western Conference. It was in the race all the way and finished in a tie for third. In 1960, the experts consigned San Francisco to no better than fourth. The club battled right down to the wire and tied for second.

Odds and handicaps mean little, if anything, to Hickey. He was born in Hickeytown, Ark., an off-the-map settlement founded by his grandfather. He grew up in nearby Clarksville where his high school feats in football, basketball and baseball first received attention.

When he enrolled at the University of Arkansas in the fall of 1937, Red's first love was baseball and he was determined to have a professional career on the diamond. But the school at that time did not participate in baseball and he had to be content with All-Southwest Conference honors in football and basketball.

In fact, he is listed in the Arkansas basketball Hall of Fame, mainly because in his senior year the Razorbacks gained the semifinals of the NCAA tournament. He is not listed in the football Hall of Fame, although he was outstanding enough to be picked for the West team in the annual Shrine classic at San Francisco.

Drafted by the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1941, he was traded after one pre-season game to the Cleveland (now Los Angeles) Rams. Football was pushed aside during World War II as he served as a gunnery officer aboard merchant vessels in the Pacific.

Red returned to the Rams in time to help them win their first NFL title in 1945 and moved to Los Angeles with them in 1946. He and his wife, Celia, who was his high school sweetheart in Clarksville, now live in San Mateo with their three sons—Michael, 14; Patrick, 11, and Jeffrey, 4.

MARK DUNCAN

Assistant Coach

Mark Duncan was an assistant coach at Colorado State when, on an impulse, he dropped by the 49er office in the summer of 1955 during a vacation tour of the Pacific Coast. Several hours later he had accepted an offer to become the Club's defensive backfield coach.

The name of Duncan had become quite well known in National Football League circles, particularly after the success of such players as Jack Christiansen, Jim David, Thurman McGraw, Dale Dodrill and Don Burroughs.

Mark's early seasons with the 49ers were devoted to building up the defensive backfield. During the past two years he has been primarily concerned with the defensive linemen and linebackers. His old pupil, Christiansen, took over the instruction of the wing-backs and safetymen. Their combined efforts produced a defense that yielded only 205 points in 1960, best record in the NFL.

Duncan starred in football, basketball and baseball at Denver University in his native city, graduating in 1940. After Army service, he joined the physical education department at Colorado State and was head baseball coach, as well as assisting in football and basketball.

Mark lives in Hillsdale, Calif., with his wife, Alice, and three children—Gail, 19; Scott, 14, and Debra, 5.

BILL JOHNSON

Assistant Coach

San Francisco fans who followed the nine-year playing career of Bill (Tiger) Johnson, always rated him among the top centers in the game. Their confidence was justified when he was named on the All-Time Pro Bowl team by the Helms Athletic Foundation.

Bill was captain of the Tyler, Texas, Junior College team that won the national title, plus the Little Rose Bowl classic in 1947. These honors followed almost three years in the Pacific with the Navy.

Signed by the 49ers primarily as a linebacker in 1948, he played very little as a rookie because of a broken wrist. But he took over the following season at offensive center and provided much of the blocking that made the 49ers noted as pro football's strongest running club in the early 1950's.

Bill and his wife, Dot, reside in Palo Alto, Calif., with their three children—Bill, Jr., 12, Sherilyn, 11, and Tommy, 4.

JACK CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant Coach

Jack Christiansen played in the National Football League with the Detroit Lions for eight seasons as a defensive halfback. For six of those seasons, Chris was named on All-Pro teams. This recognition would be sufficient to place him among the legendary giants of professional football.

But the additional testimony is noteworthy. Norm Van Brocklin, generally acclaimed as football's top quarterback and passer during the 1950-60 era, has named Chris as the best defensive back. His career figures include 46 interceptions and a 22.43 average in returning 59 kickoffs.

As a player, he was the key man in a great Detroit defensive backfield known as "Chris' Crew." Joining the 49ers as defensive backfield coach in 1959, he can now point with pride to one of the best secondaries in the league.

Jack won honors as a sprinter at Colorado State before joining the Lions in 1951. He and his wife, Doris, live in Palo Alto with their four daughters—Terri, 8; Jacki, 6, and twins, Jani, 5, and Joani, 5.

BILLY WILSON

Assistant Coach

In slightly more than nine years of National Football League history, Billy Wilson engraved his name deeply into gridiron records. His nine full seasons, plus four games in 1960, show a total of 407 pass receptions—exceeded only by the 489 of Don Hutson in 11 campaigns with Green Bay.

Drafted by the 49ers in 1950 as a 21st "redshirt" choice, he joined the club in 1951 and immediately gained a place among the NFL's leading receivers. He tied for the pass receiving crown in 1955 with 53, then led in 1956 with 60 and again in 1957 with 57.

Billy, who has Sac and Fox Indian blood, was born on a reservation near Sayre, Okla. He grew up in Campbell, Calif., and served three years in the Navy before enrolling at San Jose State where he was an All-Coast performer in both football and basketball.

A perennial All-Pro choice, his biggest thrill was being named the most valuable player in the Pro Bowl of 1955. Billy and his wife, Shirley, live in Campbell with their three children—William Wynn, 7; Greg, 4, and Holly, 2.

LYNN O. WALDORF

Director of Personnel

A former president of the American Football Coaches Association and one of the most respected men in sports, Lynn (Pappy) Waldorf joined the 49er organization in 1957. Since then, he has built up a talent-scouting force second to none. His efforts have been responsible for 16 new faces on the San Francisco roster in the past two years and the 1961 crop of newcomers is rated the finest in the club's history.

A tackle at Syracuse University in the early 1920's, he coached at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma State, Kansas State and Northwestern before taking over what he termed the "Sleeping Giant" at the University of California in 1947. Under his tutelage, the Golden Bears won three consecutive Pacific Coast Conference titles—1948-49-50—and represented the West in the annual Rose Bowl classic at Pasadena. His 10-year record at California was 66 wins, 32 losses and four ties.

One of the nation's top after-dinner speakers, Pappy is especially noted for his limitless supply of limericks.

He and his wife, Louise, live in Berkeley. They have two daughters and five grandchildren.
